

Looking to stand out to recruiters? We show you how.

The way that recruiters perceive your profile through your resume and social accounts such as LinkedIn can be so important when you're looking to land that intern or graduate role at your dream company. Here are a few tips that might be helpful if you're in this situation:

Use a professional picture on your LinkedIn

LinkedIn is a social media platform for professional connections so it is really important to complement your profile with a professionally taken photograph, so that people know who you are and can attribute a name to a face. Societies often host events for professional headshot photos, so make sure to keep an eye out!

Showcase your portfolio

When applying for creative roles, it is essential for you to display the work you have done. Set up an online portfolio for the application season for a small fee and you'll benefit from the exposure!

What was your impact?

Beef up your resume by describing your work experience. Outline what you did and what impact it made on the business! Did you increase sales? Did you improve productivity? Recruiters love to see the impact that you made.

Keep it Simple

Your resume should be no more than 2 pages! List out your most recent employment history at the top of your resume because this is what recruiters are looking at. This can then be complemented by academic achievements, volunteering and leadership experience, all of which are just as important.

Write a cover letter

This is so important! Cover letters describe to the recruiter, your motivations for the job, what you are looking for and can identify certain learnings or ability that your resume sometimes is unable to relay! A cover letter should be about a page long and be a holistic overview of you and your motivations!
